History courses are designed to provide students with the analytical and bibliographical skills necessary to research and interpret the past. Emphasis is placed upon active participation in the creative process of historical inquiry.

The department offers specializations in History, Gender and Diversity Studies, Public History, Pre-Law, and European Studies.

The Gender and Diversity Studies specialization provides a fundamental understanding of the theories of gender and diversity as well as in-depth knowledge of the history and social issues of diverse groups. It combines academics and social services by preparing individuals to work in non-profit organizations, for-profit businesses, community agencies, human resources, institutional planning, public administration, educational development, or areas of communication. It also prepares students to become effective leaders in promoting institutions, relationships, politics, and services that value diversity and work toward eliminating gender stereotypes.

The Public History Specialization educates students in the applied application of history outside of the University and classroom settings. Students learn how public historians think and operate as professionals. Through both traditional and applied course work, students select and develop specific public history skills.

Pre-Law is offered in conjunction with the Political Science Department and Legal Studies Program and includes courses in legal research and writing, legal studies and skill development in logic, ethics, presentation development, and communication.

Students planning to go to graduate school are strongly advised to attain proficiency in foreign languages.

Students interested in obtaining certification to teach this subject area in secondary education need to contact an advisor in this department to carefully plan the course work to satisfy degree and some teacher certification requirements. A degree in this major is required for participation in teacher education certification options.

PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS

In addition to general University requirements, students seeking the B.A. in History must meet the requirements listed below. A minimum grade of "C" is required in all major courses.

Consult with your academic advisor for courses which may satisfy both the General Studies requirements and common prerequisites.
