"I am not an Athenian or a Greek, but a citizen of the world."
 Socrates

The Department of Government offers a B.A. in International Studies. This liberal arts, interdisciplinary program draws from political science, sociology, economics, geography, the humanities, foreign languages, and history. International Studies majors are encouraged to take elective courses in business, mass communications, foreign languages, American literature, and computer science. Upon graduation, International Studies majors may pursue opportunities in government, the military, business, foundations, the media, humanitarian agencies, and organizations with a presence abroad, including the Peace Corps. Some of our graduates have chosen to devote a year or two of their lives in a foreign country, supporting themselves by teaching English in Asia, Europe, or the Middle East.

There are two International Studies Specializations: Generalist and Area Studies. In the Generalist Specialization, students take a broad spectrum of courses relating to their major. In the Area Studies Specialization, students may choose to concentrate on the particular region of the world, such as Asia, Europe, or Latin America. In addition to completing the same core as the Generalist Specialization, students need to complete a foreign language requirement.

PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS

In addition to general University requirements, students seeking the B.A. in International Studies must meet the requirements listed below.

Consult with your academic advisor for courses which may satisfy both the General Studies and common prerequisites.

Course descriptions are listed alphabetically by prefix in the back of this Catalog.
